Monthly Commentary

The Alpha High Growth Fund delivered a total return of 4.12% (net of fees) in May 2025, marginally outperforming the Morningstar Australian Aggressive Target Allocation Index by +0.07%.

Markets rebounded in May as volatility linked to U.S. “Liberation Day” tariffs eased, and global central banks adopted a more accommodating tone. Share market rallied strongly—led by technology and AI-related stocks—while bond yields remained elevated amid persistent U.S. Treasury issuance. A U.S. federal court ruling challenging the legality of the tariffs provided some relief, and inflation data continued to moderate across major economies. The ASX 200 closed near record highs, supported by resilient labour data and broadly positive earnings.

Key contributors in May included NVIDIA, TSMC, and Broadcom, which benefited from strong earnings and sustained investor optimism around AI. Australian gold miners such as Northern Star and Gold Road also outperformed, supported by stable gold prices and heightened geopolitical risk. Detractors included Pilbara Minerals (which fell on weaker lithium prices), Ivanhoe Mines (which declined following a temporary mine shutdown after an earthquake), Eli Lilly (which missed earnings expectations) and Copart and Coloplast, which both lagged on deteriorating fundamentals.

The Fund remains relatively neutral and diversified. Portfolio changes in May were modest, with the Fund maintaining its tilt towards better quality and valuation discipline. Government bonds continue to play a role in diversifying risk.

Valuations across equity markets remain elevated, supported by hopes of a soft landing and further policy easing. However, this optimism may prove unwarranted. Consumer confidence remains mixed, with many households still feeling the strain of higher living costs despite stable job markets. Overall, while risk appetite has improved, markets are likely to remain volatile and sensitive to macroeconomic and policy developments through the remainder of 2025.
