Monthly Commentary

The Alpha High Growth Fund delivered a total return of 0.19% in July 2026, which was in line with the Morningstar Australia Aggressive Target Allocation Index.

July delivered sharp reversals in global shares, marked by a clear rotation out of recent winners. Asian technology and Korean memory stocks bore the brunt of this positioning unwind. Australian shares remained resilient, supported by strength in banks, technology and healthcare. The RBA held interest rates unchanged in June at 4.35% and on hold through July and high borrowing costs continue to constrain discretionary spending and dampen house prices. Proposed Federal Budget changes to negative gearing and capital gains tax have further dissuaded many investors away from the property market. A renewed escalation in Middle East conflict triggered another energy shock, pushing crude oil above US$100 per barrel intra-month before prices eased back towards US$90 by month-end as tanker traffic began to recover. Inflation remains above target across much of the world, with bond yields continuing to grind higher during July.

The key winner in July was Microsoft, which rose 23% following a strong earnings result. Other notable contributors included Amazon and CSL. The main detractors were semiconductors, including TSMC, Lam Research, Applied Materials, Tokyo Electron, ASML, ASM International and KLA. Australian fixed income also detracted, as long-dated bond yields responded to persistent inflation.

The macroeconomic environment remains finely balanced between supply-driven inflation shocks and sluggish demand. AI infrastructure investment remains the dominant secular driver of the economy and markets, although July's repricing highlighted that investors are becoming discerning about the timing and magnitude of returns.

Given these competing forces, maintaining disciplined portfolio diversification across equities, defensive real assets, high-quality fixed income and cash reserves remains important. The Fund has experienced some portfolio turnover in recent weeks. Key changes included trimming semiconductor exposure, including NVIDIA, ASML and Applied Materials, while adding exposure to undervalued Australian small and mid-cap companies, including Computershare, James Hardie, Cochlear, Dalrymple Bay Infrastructure, Reliance Worldwide, Cleanaway, Megaport, Smartgroup and AUB Group.
